Tyler Dillon joined WBK's Washington, D.C. office after graduating from the George Washington University Law School. He advises and advocates for clients on issues concerning broadband services, emerging technologies, public safety communications, network resiliency, privacy, cybersecurity, wireless communications, and spectrum policy. He has helped clients navigate complex regulatory issues, including by helping obtain FAA approval for UAS operations and provide guidance on compliance with novel regulations. He also works on various pro bono projects, including asylum cases.

Before joining WBK, Tyler worked for a law firm that specializes in telecommunications law and for a major phone carrier, as well as running his own business that provided public relations and research services to electoral candidates and non-profit clients. Prior to law school, Tyler ran a non-profit advocacy organization after serving as a communications director for various officials, candidates, and organizations. Tyler received his B.A. from Northwestern University, where he majored in Political Science and double-minored in Economics and Religious Studies.

In his free time, Tyler hikes in Shenandoah, cheers for a Cincinnati Bengals Super Bowl win, manages too many fantasy football teams, reads science fiction and fantasy novels, and supports various causes in his Arlington, VA community.
